20 MARCH 2013

The EPA's Waste Less, Recycle More Initiative has been released The Waste to Energy Policy is expected soon This conference will cover these major changes and more

The NSW Waste Less, Recycle Initiative is one of the most significant changes made to waste management in over a decade. $465.7 million over 5 years is to comeback to waste management in various ways. Find out what the Government has planned, grants modifications to the levy, increased recycling and use of drop off centres. Reform provides some relief to the levy's current impacts on some NSW recycling sectors, funding to prevent illegal waste dumping actions and new waste infrastructure funding.

And what of the future? A Waste to Energy policy paper is due soon and will consider the role such activities can deliver for NSW. Considerable planning challenges await waste to energy projects, so what policy levers can the NSW Government provide for such important infrastructure?

Key issues to be explored and discussed at this Conference include:

- Outcomes of the Waste levy review and its current impacts
- √ An Overview on the Waste to Energy Policy and review policy support for this emerging sector
- √ √ √ Waste infrastructure – What is required to drive the NSW waste policy outcomes
- Steel, recycling How is the Levy impacting them and how can they be addressed
- New developments in national hazardous waste infrastructure
- Waste exemption use and hazardous waste management practices
- Exploring the interplay between waste levies, carbon price and other taxes where they are going and how they are treated under tax laws
- What industry has achieved so far and what else is required
