SYDNEY FRIDAY 21 JUNE 2013

NSW is undertaking its largest review of planning legislation since the 1980s. In general reviewing the planning process is needed. This conference will discuss the new White Paper - A New Planning System for NSW and what changes it will bring. It will also discuss the failures and issues of the current planning system and consider how they will be addressed under the new proposed legislation.

Creating a new planning system is a challenge, with many stakeholders and at times polarized views. The morning sessions will explore a range of these views on the White Paper. Legal, community, consulting and a developers views share the Department of Planning in an engaging round of talks and a panel session.

A key focus of the afternoon of the conference is the ability of the White Paper to deal with necessary, even essential developments, such as waste, water, energy and transport infrastructure. Under the current system there have been many negative results on controversial developments, especially waste infrastructure. Key areas covered will include:

- ✓ Overview of the White Paper dealing with a focus on large developments
- ✓ A legal perspective on the issues with the current system – what are the legal fixes needed?
- ✓ Stakeholder perspectives on the White Paper – developer, community and architects views
- ✓ An environmental consultants views on the White paper issues with current planning laws.
